Everest player takes final swing

If one measures success by a team's record, Everest can't be considered successful in the past baseball season. Three wins in twelve games isn't a good record. Yet, the team did show marked improvement as seen by the improved scores.

Due to a lack of depth at pitching, it took the team several weeks to get started. Once the pitching started to improve, so did the team's play.

The bright spot of the season was the desire and drive of the team. Even when behind, the boys hung in there. If this desire is present in the 1967 baseball team, Everest can look forward to more success.
